The Death of Mr. Justice WALTON.

THE SUDDEN death of Mr. Justice WALTON removes from the King's Bench Division a judge whose sound knowledge of commercial law can ill be spared. Called to the bar in 1868, he joined the Northern Circuit and at first practised in Liverpool. On migrating to London he acquired an extensive practice, mainly in shipping and mercantile cases, and he also appeared in cases, such as Barnardo v. McHugh (1891, A. C. 388) and Barnardo v. Ford (1892, A. C. 326), in which the interests of Roman Catholics were involved. It was not till 1892 that he took silk, and his increasing reputation in commercial cases marked him out for the promotion which came in 1901. The vacancy was caused by the retirement—followed immediately by the death—of A. L. SMITH, M.R. Lord COLLINS—then COLLINS, L.J.—became Master of the Rolls, Sir JAMES MATHEW took his place as a Lord Justice, and WALTON, J., succeeded Sir JAMES MATHEW. Previously to this the profession had shewn their confidence in him, and their appreciation of his personal qualities of tact and temper, by his appointment as Chairman of the General Council of the Bar. His reputation for geniality and courtesy was fully maintained on the bench.

The late Judge's Work.

DURING HIS tenure of office as a judge Mr. Justice WALTON did much useful work—largely in the Commercial Court—though his reputation as a mercantile lawyer did not always save his decisions from review. In Brandt v. Dunlop Rubber Co. (1905, A. C. 454), on equitable assignments, the House of Lords reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal and restored his judgment. But in the two stamp cases of Maple & Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1908, A. C. 22) and Speyer Bros. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1908, A. C. 92), the House of Lords were against him, in the former case reversing, and in the latter affirming, the Court of Appeal. In the important insurance case of Macbeth v. Maritime Insurance Co. (1908, A. C. 144), on constructive total loss, also, the House of Lords reversed both WALTON, J., and the Court of Appeal, but they were able to overrule Angel v. Merchants' Marine Insurance Co. (1903, 1 K. B. 811), by which he was bound. His interest in the improvement of the law and in the development of international law was shewn by his active participation in the recent meeting of the International Law Association. It is very much to be regretted that his judicial career has been so short.

The New Statutes.

WE COMMENCE printing this week the statutes of the past session. The most important of these are the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (10 Ed. 7, c. 8), and the Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Ed. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24). The former is already sufficiently well known ; the latter purports to be a consolidating measure only, and it repeals the whole or parts of thirteen statutes, commencing with the Alehouse Act, 1828. The rest of the new statutes contain no Act of special importance, except the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1910 (c. 12), which provides temporarily the two additional judges of the King's Bench Division. The Ancient Monuments Protection Act, 1910 (c. 3), extends the provisions of the Act of 1882 as to gift, devise or bequest of certain ancient monuments to the Commissioners of Works to all ancient monuments as defined by the Act of 1900—that is, "any structure, erection, or monument of historic or architectural interest, or any remains thereof." The Mines Accidents (Rescue and Aid) Act, 1910 (c. 15), makes provision with respect to organization for the purpose of rescue and aid in the case of accidents in mines. The Diseases of Animals Act, 1910 (c. 20), prohibits the export of unfit horses. The Companies (Converted Societies) Act, 1910 (c. 23), removes the doubts raised by recent decisions as to the validity of the conversion of certain friendly societies into companies. The Accession Declaration Act, 1910 (c. 29), simplifies the form of declaration to be made by the Sovereign on his accession. And the Small Holdings Act, 1910 (c. 34), provides compensation for tenants on whom notice to quit is served with a view to the use of the land for the provision of small holdings.

The Atlantic Fisheries Arbitration.

"THE ARGUMENTS in this historic arbitration," to use the words of the Times correspondent, "came to an end" on the afternoon of the 12th of August, on which day Senator Root concluded his speech on behalf of the United States. The Attorney-General, on behalf of Great Britain, was allowed to comment on certain points raised by Senator Root, on the ground that they were new evidence. The President then adjourned the tribunal sine die. In doing so he addressed the counsel present as "friends," following "the noble custom prevailing among members of the Bar in Anglo-Saxon countries, even if they represent the adverse parties of a litigation." We quote from the Times correspondent's account, but surely the presiding judge in a court does not address the contending parties' counsel as his "friends," though inter se these counsel do speak of their opponents as "my friend." Formerly, of course, when English judges of the courts of common law were also serjeants-at-law, they addressed a serjeant who appeared before them as "Brother" So-and-so. Perhaps some confusion between these two customs was the cause of the remark quoted. The proceedings before the tribunal have occupied forty days' sittings, and the award is expected to be given in about a month.

Land Valuation Returns.

BY SECTION 26 of the Finance Act, 1910, every landowner is required to furnish to the Inland Revenue Commissioners a return containing such particulars as the commissioners may require as to rent received, and as to the ownership, tenure, area, character, and use of the land, and the consideration given on any previous sale or lease of the land, and any other matters which may properly be required for the purpose of the valuation of the land, and which it is in his power to give. This is to enable the commissioners to make the valuation prescribed by this section—that is, a valuation shewing separately the total value and the site value of all land in the United Kingdom. A form, accompanied by instructions as to its use, has now been issued shewing the "particulars required by the commissioners which must be furnished so far as it is in the power of the person making the return to give them." Having regard to the definitions of "total value" and "site value," and the further terms, "gross value" and "full site value," which are introduced as part of the machinery of valuation, the particulars required are naturally lengthy. They include the tenure and description of the land, with particulars of buildings and structures thereon, the extent of the land, if known, the terms on which it is held by tenants, any outgoings, charges, easements, and restrictive covenants, and particulars of the last sale, and of subsequent expenditure. In addition the landowner may give his estimate of the value of the land, shewing how it is arrived at and the various different values—gross value, full site value, &c. For this purpose the instructions restate the statutory definitions of the various values. Landowners will have to consider whether it will be better to furnish their own valuations, or to wait till the commissioners have served their provisional valuation under section 27. The landowner has then sixty days in which to give notice of objection. But the required particulars must, of course, be given so far as it is in his power to do so, and it must be carefully borne in mind that, under section 12, no deduction from site value can be claimed hereafter if it is one which could have been, and but was not, claimed for the purpose of ascertaining the original site value.

A New Patent Court in the United States.

AMERICANS, like Englishmen, are not satisfied with their patent law, and a Bill has been brought into the United States Senate to provide a special tribunal for the determination of patent cases. A favourable report has been made by a committee appointed by the Senate to consider this Bill, which proposes to create a new court which shall exercise the jurisdiction now vested in the circuit courts of appeal as regards patent cases, and which shall have no other jurisdiction. The court is to consist of five judges—a chief justice to be appointed by the President for life, and four associate justices to be nominated by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, from among the federal, district and circuit judges, for terms of six years respectively. The judges so nominated are to receive additional remuneration for the period during which they are absent from their districts or circuits. The committee point out that under the existing system there are nine courts of last resort in patent cases, with the result that the title to patents is involved in confusion and uncertainty. A patent may be adjudged to be valid in eight circuits but if the court in the ninth circuit declares it to be invalid, the patentee loses all the benefit of the decisions in the other tribunals, because anyone within the jurisdiction of the ninth circuit may manufacture the patented article and sell it in any part of the United States. There are, however, some difficulties in the path of the new scheme. A doubt is raised as to the "constitutionality" of the provision by which the Chief Justice is authorized to nominate the associate justices of the new court, inasmuch as the power to appoint judges is vested by the Constitution in the President of the United States. Another doubt is whether it is constitutional to increase the salary of the judges when they are serving in the Patent Court and to withdraw the increased payment when they return to their districts or circuits. It is suggested that this may be regarded as the reduction of the salary of a federal judge during his term of office, which is prohibited by the Constitution. Legislation in this country is free from such anxieties. But the prospects of any amendment of the law of patents are even less in England than in the United States. Any scheme of reform is laid aside, like hundreds of other projects, because there is no time, perhaps no inclination, to consider such dry subjects.

Accidents in Skating Rinks.

ACCIDENTS in skating rinks are by no means infrequent, but they are not often the subject of an action at law. In the case of Fisher v. Premier Rinks (Limited), however, before Judge LUMLEY SMITH, in the City of London Court, the plaintiff brought his action to recover damages in respect of an injury which he sustained while skating in the defendants' rink. It appeared that, a lady skater having had a bad fall, one of the floor managers started briskly across the rink to the lady's assistance, and on the way ran against the plaintiff, who was thrown down and seriously injured. It was proved that notices had been posted up by the defendants stating that "Patrons skate at their own risk; the management accept no responsibility of any kind," but the plaintiff alleged that he had not seen or read the notices. The judge, however, made short work of the case, holding that the facts shewed no such negligence on the part of the managers as would make the defendants liable. Rinking, he said, was an amusement which was liable to risks and accidents, and these the plaintiff must take upon himself in the ordinary way. This ruling is not likely to be questioned. The dangers of several English games—such as football and polo—are notorious, but we do not hear that those who are injured while playing seek compensation in the law courts. The liability of a player at a lawful game acting in good faith was discussed by the commentators on the ancient Roman Law, who considered that he incurred no liability if, while acting according to the rules of the game, he had the misfortune to injure another player. It was quite reasonable that the attendant should move briskly across the floor of the rink, and a collision under the circumstances, assuming that there was no want of care on the part of the plaintiff, was in the nature of an inevitable accident.

The Exercise of General Powers of Appointment.

THE DECISION of PARKER, J., in Re Wilkinson (1910, 2 Ch. 216), illustrates the extent to which the general words of section 27 of the Wills Act, 1837, may be carried. That section provides that a general devise of real estate shall include any real estate which the testator has power to appoint in any manner he may think proper, and shall operate as an execution of the power; and similarly as to implied execution of a power to appoint personal estate. Hence a general devise of real estate and a general bequest of personal estate carry respectively real and personal estate over which the testator has a general power of appointment. But suppose the power is to charge a sum of money on real, or real and personal, estate, and then to dispose of the sum so charged as personal property, is this exercised by a mere general bequest? In Re Jones (34 Ch. D. 65) KAY, J., held that it was. There a testator gave his residuary real and personal estate on trust for conversion, and empowered his widow to appoint by will that £20,000 should be raised and applied as she should think fit. The widow by her will made a general devise and bequest in favour of her daughter. This both charged the £20,000 and disposed of it when charged. On the other hand, in Re Salvin (1906, 2 Ch. 452), where the power was to charge real estate with £6,000 in favour of the donee of the power or any other person, a different effect was given to a general bequest by the donee, and it did not pass the £6,000. In the case of a power to charge on real estate a sum which is to be treated as personal estate, general words of gift, said BUCKLEY, J., are not to be construed as effecting, "first, the creation of the personal estate by charging it on the real estate, and, secondly, the bequest on the personal estate thus created," and he quoted FITZGIBBON, L.J., in Re Wallinger's Estate (1898, 1 I.R. p. 148), that section 27 presupposes the existence of some real estate, or some personal estate, as the case may be, which at the time of the gift is already subject to a general power of appointment. BUCKLEY, J., distinguished Re Jones on the ground that there the trust for conversion made the whole property one personal fund, and the power in the will was practically a power to appoint part of this fund. But in Re Wilkinson (supra) PARKER, J., has applied Re Jones, although there was no trust for conversion. A testator empowered his wife to appoint that out of his real and personal estate there should be set apart enough money to produce £2 10s. a week, and she was to have absolute power to dispose by her will of the capital and income of the money; "subject as aforesaid," he gave his real and personal estate after his wife's death in favour of his children. The wife survived and made a will disposing of all the residue of her real and personal estate. PARKER, J., held that, although there was no trust for conversion, yet the widow's power was a power overriding the beneficial trusts, and that her own residuary bequest both charged the sum necessary to produce £2 10s. a week on the real and personal estate as a mixed fund, and disposed of that sum when charged. Probably, however, the distinction suggested in Re Salvin was both more practical and more in accordance with the language of section 27.

Those persons, says the Globe, who would abolish trial by jury are accustomed to make a great point of the disagreement of juries. Much the same kind of thing is said by those who desire to abolish the need for unanimity. As a matter of fact the disagreement of a jury, at least in civil cases, is a comparatively rare occurrence. The number of actions tried at the Royal Courts of Justice in which the juries disagree is not more than 2 per cent. of the whole. There must be nearly the same proportion of cases in which an abortive result is not incompatible with the interests of justice.

The Right of Subrogation.

THE recent decision of SWINFEN EADY, J., in Re British Power Traction and Lighting Co. (ante, p. 749) illustrates forcibly the limited nature of the relief which is available to creditors under the doctrine of subrogation. In effect the doctrine operates as an assignment of a claim against a debtor or against assets, and it confers on the person who takes the benefit of it no greater right than could have been asserted by the person to whose rights he is subrogated. At law the doctrine has long been applied in insurance cases, where the policy is only one of indemnity. The insurer, on paying the insurance money, is entitled to all the remedies which the insured could have enforced: Castellain v. Preston (11 Q. B. D., p. 388). In equity it was, perhaps, first applied in cases where a person had advanced money to enable a wife to pay tradesmen for necessaries supplied to her. The tradesmen could have recovered their debts against the husband, and the lender whose money had paid their debts was subrogated to their rights: Harris v. Lee (1 P. Wms. 482). In Jenner v. Morris (3 D. F. & J., p. 52) Lord CAMPBELL, C., recognized the true character of the doctrine by treating it as in the nature of equitable assignment. "It may be possible," he said, "that equity considers that the tradespeople have for valuable consideration assigned to the party who advanced the money the legal debt which would be due from the husband on furnishing the necessaries." And the case where a person lending money to a company which borrows in excess of its powers, but applies the money in paying off creditors, is allowed to recover the money to the extent to which it is so applied has sometimes been referred to the principle of subrogation (Re National Building Society, 5 Ch., p. 313); though more recently the tendency has been to treat the borrowing as not in fact in excess of the company's borrowing powers where the money is spent in reducing liabilities: Blackburn Building Society v. Cunliffe, Brooks, & Co. (22 Ch. D. 61); Re Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay Railway Co. (1899, 1 Ch. 440). "So far," said LINDLEY, M.R., in the latter case, "as the money has been applied in discharging debts or liabilities which could be enforced against the company, the prohibition against borrowing does not apply to it."

The leading application in equity of the doctrine of subrogation appears to be where creditors of an executor or a receiver who carries on business on behalf of an estate which he is managing, are allowed the benefit of his right of indemnity against the estate. This was recognized in Ex parte Garland (10 Ves. 110), where Lord ELDON, C., held that the creditors had as their security not only the personal responsibility of the executor, but also the whole fund that was properly embarked in the business; and in Ex parte Edmonds (4 D. F. & J., p. 498) TURNER, L.J., pointed out that Ex parte Garland and other cases proceeded on the principle of indemnity. "They proceed upon the principle that the executor or trustee directed to carry on the business having the right to resort for his indemnity to the assets directed to be employed in carrying it on, the creditors of the trade are entitled to the benefit of that right, and then become creditors of the fund to which the executor or trustee has a right to resort": see Douse v. Gorton (1891, A.C. 190).

But if debts which have been incurred by the executor in carrying on business are only admitted against the testator's estate by virtue of the executor's right of indemnity, it follows that they can only be enforced to the extent of such right, and if the executor's claim against the estate is subject to a liability of his own to the estate, the right of indemnity is limited to the balance of the claim, and the right of the creditors against the estate is similarly limited. In Re Johnson (15 Ch. D., p. 555) JESSEL, M.R., shewed that the principle stated by TURNER, L.J., required to be applied in this way. "If," he said, "the right of the creditors is, as is stated by Lord Justice TURNER, the right to put themselves, so to speak, in the place of a trustee who is entitled to an indemnity, of course, if the trustee is not entitled, except on terms to make good a loss to the trust estate, the creditors cannot have a better right." And KEKEWICH, J., expressed the same result very clearly in Re Frith (1902, 1 Ch., p. 345): "The creditor has no right whatever against the estate, but he has a right to sue the trustee who has incurred the debt. If the trustee on his part has a clear account, and has a right of indemnity against the estate, the creditor is subrogated to that right, and for that purpose the creditor is allowed to intervene. He may sue the trustee, and he may claim the benefit of the indemnity to which the trustee is entitled out of the estate. If, on the other hand, the trustee is in default and has not got that right, then no doubt the creditor can get nothing, because he is relying on an equity which does not exist." In that case, however, only one of three trustees was indebted to the estate. This indebtedness did not involve liability on the part of the other two trustees who had clear accounts, and the creditors were entitled to the benefit of their right of indemnity, notwithstanding that the creditors could not have claimed it through the indebted trustee.

The recent case of Re British Power Traction and Lighting Co. (supra) would have been a simple application of the above principles but for the circumstance that the liability of the receiver was covered by sureties. A receiver had been appointed in a debenture-holders' action, and the receiver and his sureties gave a bond for £10,000 as security. The receiver carried on the business and incurred liabilities to creditors, and of these a sum of £979 remained unpaid. Hence, had the receiver's accounts been clear, he would have had a right of indemnity for this sum against the estate, and, upon the principle applicable in the case of executors, the creditors would have been entitled to the benefit of the right. He was, however, indebted to the estate in the sum of £489, and if his indebtedness had not been secured by the bond, there was no question that the creditors' claim against the estate would have been diminished by this sum. Did it make any difference that the estate was entitled to recover the £489 from the sureties? In other words, could the creditors require the bond to be put in force, and the £489 recovered under it, in order that the receiver's accounts might be cleared, and that the full £979 might be available for them out of the assets? SWINFRN EADY, J., held that they could not, and it is difficult to see how any other result could have been arrived at. Clearly the receiver himself could have recovered against the estate only the excess of £979 over £489. He could not have required the bond to be put in suit in order to give an advantage to himself; and since the right of the creditors is strictly limited to the right of the receiver, they were equally debarred from requiring the bond to be enforced. If the creditors had a direct right against the assets, the case would of course be different, and they would be entitled to have the assets made good by the sureties in order to satisfy their claim. But the nature of their right—a right merely to enforce the receiver's right of indemnity—necessarily excluded any claim on their behalf against the sureties.

The Income Tax Acts.

PRATT AND REDMAN'S INCOME TAX LAW: BEING AN ANALYSIS OF THE INCOME TAX ACTS, WITH DECISIONS THEREUNDER, CASES OF ILLUSTRATION, AND EXPLANATORY NOTES. By the late J. TIDD PRATT, Q.C. EIGHTH EDITION. By JOSEPH HAWORTH REDMAN, Barrister-at-Law. Butterworth & Co.; Shaw & Sons.

The complications of the Income Tax Acts are well known, partly due to the complexity of the subject, and partly to the manner in which the statutes are drafted. The more desirable it is to have at hand a work, such as the present, which sets out shortly and clearly the leading rules of the statutes and the effect of the numerous decisions upon them. Specially important are the duties under Schedule D on profits of trades and professions and other income not elsewhere taxed, and the question of charging these when they are derived from businesses carried on abroad has been a frequent cause of litigation. Among the well-known cases referred to in the notes are Cesena Sulphur Co. v. Nicholson (1 Ex. D. 428), and Colquhoun v. Brooks (14 App. Cas. 493); and also the recent cases of De Beers Consolidated Mines v. Howe (1906, A. C. 455) and New Zealand Shipping Co. (96 L.T. 50), the latter two establishing that in the case of a company the test of residence is where the real control of the company is exercised. The work includes the income tax clauses of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910.

Trust Accounts.

TRUST ACCOUNTS, INCLUDING THE HISTORY, PREPARATION, INVESTIGATION AND AUDIT THEREOF. By PRETOR W. CHANDLER, Solicitor. SECOND EDITION. Butterworth & Co.

In the present edition of this useful work an extensive re-arrangement of the text has been effected, though the system of treating trust accounts is the same as in the previous edition, a few additional forms of account being inserted. Chapter I. contains a summary of the cases in which the principles of the duty of trustees to keep and to render accounts have been considered, and also to render information to beneficiaries and give them the opportunity of checking the accounts and information. In the keeping of accounts the apportionments which have to be made between capital and income occupy a prominent place, and this matter is fully dealt with in Chapter VII., including apportionments which are governed by rules in equity, such as those necessitated by the rules in Hove v. Earl of Dartmouth, in Re Earl of Chesterfield's Trust (24 Ch. D. 643), and in Allhusen v. Whittell (L. R. 4 Eq. 295). These explanatory chapters, together with the numerous forms of account, make the work a very convenient guide in all matters relating to trust accounts.

Inland Revenue Regulations and the Money-lenders Act.

[To the Editor of the Solicitors' Journal and Weekly Reporter.]

Sir,—Referring to your comments on the decision of the House of Lords in Sadler v. Whiteman (1910, 1 K. B. 868) in the current number the point of view of the purchaser for value without notice should be considered. It is impossible in practice to ascertain whether all the requirements necessary to constitute a valid transaction under the Act were complied with, and in many cases there is nothing on the face of the deed or other document to shew that the Act is applicable at all—there may be suspicion only that the vendor is a money-lender. This being so, the necessity of relying on the registration at Somerset House is apparent. It must not be forgotten that the Act makes void all transactions where the requirements are not satisfied, and there is no clause protecting a purchaser for value without notice, as sub-section 5 of section 1 only applies to that section.

F. R. B.

Aug. 13.

[Possibly section 2 should contain a proviso in favour of purchasers for value without notice, but the power of the Inland Revenue to override the Act by their regulations or forms seems to be a distinct matter.—Ed. S.J.]

The Late Sir Joseph Walton.

The following letter from Sir John Gray Hill appeared in the Liverpool Courier of the 16th inst.:

Sir,—As an old Liverpool solicitor, who knew the late Mr. Justice Walton well from the beginning of his professional life to the end, I should like to add a few words to your kindly and appreciative notice of him.

Liverpool may well be proud of her son. The elder members of my branch of the profession here will remember his career at the bar in our city, his remarkable knowledge of law, especially that relating to commerce and shipping, the acuteness of his mind, the breadth of his view, and the wisdom of his opinion, which could always be relied upon. Nor will they ever forget the extreme kindness of his disposition and his fund of human sympathy. This breadth and sympathy seem to be in the air of Liverpool, for to refer only to the legal profession, I may say that they animate other great Liverpool judges still happily with us, who, I may add, do not forget their old friends now they are advanced beyond their sphere. So also they animated our late friend Mr. Warr. The qualities of which I speak Mr. Justice Walton carried, nothing diminished, from the bar to the bench.

I am old enough to remember many famous advocates. Sir Richard Bethell, afterwards Lord Westbury, is amongst the earliest figures which rise before me. His mighty intellect forced admiration even from the unwilling, but his arrogant and contemptuous manner towards all whose minds were less acute than his (that is, nearly everyone brought in contact with him) surrounded him with "curses not loud but deep," and ultimately brought about a fall, almost like that of Wolsey, in the House of Lords. How different was Mr. Justice Walton and are the other great judges to whom I refer.

But a few days ago, as I sat near him at the meeting of the International Law Association in the Guildhall of the City of London, and listened to his most valuable paper on "The Limit of State Interference with Maritime Contracts," he seemed so light and happy, so full of alertness of intellect and kindness of heart, that I thought he would be long with us to adorn the bench and to fill Liverpool with pride that she had produced him. Would that we could his "light re-lume."

"The raiment that was flesh is turned to dust," but the spirit that it enfolded is not lost even here. It remains as an incentive to the men of Liverpool to do their duty as he did his.—Yours, etc.,

JOHN GRAY HILL.

10, Water-street, Liverpool, 15th of August, 1910.

Before the commencement of the business of the Vacation Court, on Wednesday, Sir S. T. EVANS, P., made the following reference to the late Mr. Justice Walton, all the members of the Bar remaining standing:—

Mr. Bramwell Davis and gentlemen of the bar,—If the courts had been sitting there would have been to-day general expressions of sadness at the great loss the profession has sustained by the death of Mr. Justice Walton. As this is the only court sitting, I cannot refrain from saying how much we deplore his death, and that we offer our sympathy to his family. He lived a strenuous life in his profession, which was brought to a close in the way in which he would have wished it, for he died in harness. He was a superb advocate, facile princeps, in my opinion, in the particular branch of the law in which his practice lay. He was a lucid, cogent, and most persuasive reasoner. I cannot do better in referring to him than paraphrase words used of a great judge, Lord Hardwicke: "He was eminently qualified for his high office, which he filled for some years with the greatest reputation to himself and satisfaction to the public. His knowledge was sound and extensive; the clear and comprehensive manner in which he delivered his opinions could not but make the dullest hearer sensible of their weight. He shone in those chief characteristics of a judge—temper and patience. He heard all with attention, and then decided with readiness, enforcing his decrees with such convincing reasoning as equally gave information to the bar and satisfaction to the parties. He greatly encouraged industry in young members of the bar by showing particular attention to their arguments, and noticing what would admit of approbation. He was engaging and polite in his manner, and yet failed not in every point to support the dignity of his office. He commanded universal esteem and reverence." As a man he was one of the kindest nature and sunniest disposition; no one in the profession was more beloved by its members, and no one better deserved their admiration and esteem. In the name of the bench and the bar, I respectfully offer to his relatives our deep sympathy.

Mr. BRAMWELL DAVIS, K.C., of the Chancery Bar, the senior member of the bar present, said he desired to concur in these expressions of sympathy. On the Chancery side their knowledge of him as a judge was limited, but when he sat as Vacation Judge no one could have been more courteous and patient or more anxious to do justice, and he felt sure from what he then saw that every word in his praise which had just been uttered was true.

Mr. LEWIS EDMUNDS, K.C., on behalf of the common law bar, gave expression to their and his own great sorrow. All who had known the late judge, whether at the bar or on the bench, felt that a great personality had gone. He was constantly in the courts, either at the bar or on the bench, and his was a popular and agreeable personality.

Societies.

The Law Association.

The usual monthly meeting of the directors was held at the Law Society's Hall on Thursday, the 11th of August, Mr. T. H. Gardiner being in the chair. The other directors present were Mr. J. E. W. Rider, Mr. W. P. Richardson, Mr. Mark Waters, and the secretary, Mr. E. E. Barron. A sum of £115 was voted in relief of deserving cases. Five new members were elected, and other general business was transacted.

Obituary.

Mr. Richard Peter.

Mr. Richard Peter died on Monday, the 15th inst., at Launceston, at the age of 100 years. Mr. Peter was born on the 9th of October, 1809, at Bodmin, and was admitted a solicitor in 1838. He held numerous public appointments in Launceston, and was town clerk from 1874 to 1885. In 1864-5 he was Mayor of Launceston, and in 1890 he was appointed a magistrate of the borough and of the county of Devon. Mr. Peter was an antiquarian, and in 1885, in conjunction with his son, Mr. Otho Peter, he published a history of Launceston. In 1908 he was presented with the freedom of Launceston, and on the occasion of the visit of the King and Queen (then Prince and Princess of Wales) to Cornwall in June, 1909, he was presented, and received their Royal Highnesses' congratulations. Mr. Peter celebrated his 100th birthday on the 9th of October last, and on that occasion King Edward and the present King sent him messages offering their good wishes.

Sir Charles Pearson.

Sir Charles Pearson, a judge of the Court of Session from 1896 to 1909, with the bench title of Lord Pearson, died in Edinburgh on Monday, the 15th inst. Sir Charles Pearson, who was born in 1843, was educated at Edinburgh Academy, Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities, and Corpus Christi College, Oxford. At Oxford he took a first-class in both classical moderations and Litt. Hum. High honours rewarded his attendance at the law classes at Edinburgh University, and when he was admitted a member of the Faculty of Advocates in 1870 he fully realised the expectations entertained of his abilities by gathering a large junior practice. He was briefed for many prominent cases, and was specially retained by the Crown to assist in the prosecution of the directors of the City of Glasgow Bank. In 1886 he was unanimously elected Procurator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and in the following year, as the chief lay official of the Church, he was knighted on the occasion of Queen Victoria's Jubilee. In 1890 he became Solicitor-General for Scotland, and was elected (unopposed) Conservative member of Parliament for Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities. In 1891 he succeeded the late Lord Robertson as Lord Advocate, and in the same year was sworn a member of the Privy Council. He held the office of Lord Advocate until 1892, when his party resigned, and was again appointed in 1895, when the Unionists returned to power. From 1892 to 1895, while out of office, he was Dean of the Faculty of Advocates. He was called to the English bar by the Inner Temple in 1870, a month before his admission to the Faculty of Advocates. Sir Charles Pearson married in 1873 Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. M. Grayhurst Hewat, of Norwood.

Dissolution.

General.

"My recent experiences," says a correspondent (Mr. W. E. Walker) to the Daily News, "lead me to write to you on the subject of the treatment of juries. I was summoned to the Sessions at Westminster last Saturday morning, and spent the whole day hanging about the court doing nothing. We—that is, the waiting jury—were then told to be present again this morning (the 8th inst.) at 10.30. On arriving at the court we learnt that the sitting would not begin till twelve o'clock. Now, sir, I consider this is a disgraceful way to arrange matters. I am a particularly busy man, and every five minutes is of value, and in the course of conversation I found the same applied to all the others. It seemed to us that the convenience of everyone else connected with the court, from the judge to the ushers, is considered before that of the poor jurors, who, after all, as they try the cases and give their verdict, should be of some importance. It is not for me to formulate methods of reform, but to anyone who has spent many weary, useless hours at the courts they will be fairly obvious. Anyhow, I consider it is a crying evil that demands redress."

In an interview which Reuter's representative has had with Sir Edward Morris, the Prime Minister of Newfoundland, who has just arrived in London from The Hague on the conclusion of the North Atlantic Fisheries Arbitration, the Premier is reported to have said: "As the question is still sub judice, I am, of course, unable to discuss the various matters in dispute. We are now waiting for the verdict, which I can only hope will be one which can be justified and will settle for ever the disputes of a century, thus removing a source of friction between the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race, two branches which must come more closely together and be united both in their own interests and in those of others. Our stay at The Hague also brought home to us how necessary in the interests of the peace of the world such a tribunal as this is. The value of this arbitration tribunal would be largely increased if it could be made permanent, and not subject to change and shifting when a new court has to be formed to discuss a fresh question. The tribunal should be a permanent international one, composed of men who by birth and education are fitted for it, whose appointments could not be revoked, and whose salaries should be such as to place beyond all question their absolute impregnability and independence."

Mr. Justice Jelf continues to progress favourably, and is now able to leave his room for a few hours each day.

The funeral of Mr. Justice Walton took place on Wednesday at the Roman Catholic Cemetery, Kensal Green. It was preceded by a Requiem service at St. James's Church, Spanish-place, where the late judge had been a worshipper for many years. The Mass was said by his son, the Rev. J. A. Walton, who was assisted by Canon Gildea. The chief mourners were Mr. Arthur Walton and Mr. P. Walton (sons), Mother Teresa Walton, Sister Superior, St. Leonard's-on-Sea (sister), Mrs. Jasper White (sister), Mr. Jasper White (brother-in-law), and Mrs. Arthur Walton (daughter-in-law). Among others present were:—The Lord Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Phillimore, Mr. Justice Warrington, Sir Patrick Coll, Lady Primrose, the Rev. J. Rickaby, S.J., the Rev. W. Bodkin (Rector of Stonyhurst College), Mr. E. R. Cook (representing the Law Society), Mr. G. Phillimore, Mr. Hanbury Aggs, Mr. Frederick Laing, K.C., Dr. Barry Ball, Mr. Thomas Holland (Town Clerk, Chelsea), Mr. Walter Schroder (representing the Medico-Legal Society), Lady Day, Mr. Balfour Allan, Mr. Ralph Bancks, the Rev. J. Pinnington, S.J., and Major F. J. A. Skeet. The final Absolution after the Mass was pronounced by Father Walton, and he also said the last prayers at the grave.
